Breakthroughs in Gastroenterology & Hepato-Pancreatology:
Translating Knowledge into Practice

Program Highlights

1) Session title: Current trends in prevention strategies for gastric cancer

The burden of gastric cancer still remains substantial, especially in Asia. Helicobacter pylori is a major cause of gastric cancer, and primary prevention of gastric cancer may be possible by eradicating Helicobacter pylori. Population-based screening programs have been implemented in countries with high prevalence. In this session, we will discuss Helicobacter pylori eradication therapy for the prevention of gastric cancer, risk-based gastric cancer screening, and optimal surveillance strategy for gastric precancerous lesions and metachronous gastric cancer.

2) Session title: Diversity in Gastroenterology

Diversity in gastroenterology, like in any other field of medicine, refers to the representation and inclusion of individuals from various backgrounds, including but not limited to race, ethnicity, gender, socioeconomic status, and sexual orientation.

Achieving diversity in gastroenterology is important for enhanced patient care, reduced health disparities, research and innovation, mentorship, and role models.

This session was planned to touch on these issues of diversity in gastroenterology.
